

March 2022

Marilyn Chin to give online poetry reading for Emory on March 13

Award-winning poet Marilyn Chin will read her funny, fearless, and feminist works in an online reading, open to the public at no charge, on Sunday, March 13 at 3 p.m. for Women’s History Month. Her poems address immigrant life, assimilation struggles, the conflict between traditional and modern life, otherness and bullying, and more.

Read more and register

Emory Libraries announce publishing agreement with Cambridge University Press

Good news for Emory University researchers: They can publish their work open access in all Cambridge University journals without paying a publishing cost, thanks to an agreement between Emory Libraries and Cambridge University Publishing.

Learn more

Oxford exhibit on inclusive archives aims to inspire change

If you haven’t yet visited the Oxford Library exhibit “The Work is Never Finished: Building an Inclusive Archive,” you’ll want to check it out. It features artifacts and other archival materials, selected by the Oxford College Library special collections and Libraries exhibits teams, that document the early days of Emory and Oxford College and examine the legacies of slavery and dispossession that still affect these institutions today.

Read more

March 27 event with Isabel Wilkerson goes virtual

The One Book, One Read conversation with “Caste” author Isabel Wilkerson, a former Emory professor, on Sunday, March 27, will be an online event, according to presenter Atlanta Fulton Public Library Foundation. “A Conversation with Isabel Wilkerson, author of ‘Caste: The Origins of Our Discontents’” will begin at 3 p.m.; Emory Libraries is a sponsor of this event.

Register now

Facebook
 Twitter
 Instagram
 YouTube

Subscribe to Keywords

Keywords archive

Library news

Make a gift

libraries.emory.edu

AAE Home | Learn about 2036 | Support Emory

View this email in your browser.